Democratic Party leader most responsible for initiating the current debate, Michita Sakata, strongly denied that his party's goal is an offensive force capable of attacking other nations.

Mr. Sakata, chairman of ruling party's security problem research committee, said that Japan seeks only a "denial capability" — a force strong enough to protect itself from small-scale invasions.

The basic idea of Japan's defense is passive, to maintain peace." be said. "We cannot be a strong power like we used to be." He added that Japan must con-tinue to rely on U.S. forces for power to cope with anything stronger than small-scale invasions.

The government of Premier Taken Fukuda bas not endorsed Gen. Kurisu's views but has expressed satisfaction that a national debate on defense policy is under way. To Mr. Sakata, the current debate is valuable not as an argument over types of weapons, but as a consensus-building exercise to deter-mine what the defense forces should become. He produced a public opinion poll showing that 83 percent of Japanese now support the defense system.

The debate is caused partly by the popular perception that the United States is not the reliable protector of Asia that it once was. The defeat in Vietnam, the troop ithdrawal from Korea, and the Carter administration's emphasis on European defense have spawned doubts that the United States will defend Japan in a crisis.

A Japanese Defense Agency analysis recently interpreted U.S. policy to mean that part of the 7th Fleet would be dispatched to Europe in case of a war there, leaving northern Asia less protected. There also is a growing fear of the Soviet Union's Pacific fleet, which is based about 700 miles from Tokyo

Rape Issue Galvanizes Spanish Feminists

BARCELONA, May 31 (NYT) - In a back room of the Bar Lasal. which is for women only. Inma explained to a male visitor the thinking behind a campaign that has galvanized Spain's late-starting feminist movement. The issue is rape.

"Rape is not only the aggression that takes place in the street." said the soft-spoken young woman. "It is all the aggression that occurs against women, from the insults on the sidewalk to the disguised rape that takes place in marriage. But even if the penal code is changed and men actually get sent to jail, one has to go more deeply into this. The bourgeois man, who suavely seduces a woman, never goes to jail, But that's rape, too.

In the hygienically scrubbed har. nucked away in Barcelona's grubby Barrio China quarter. Inma and a handful of other radical feminists coined a rallying cry recently that in its hyperbole caught the mood of defiance in the women's movement here: Contra violación, castración

The movement against rape seems to have taken bold, because it at once challenges a legal system that rarely punishes male rapists and usually humiliates their female victims, and pits Spanish women against Spanish men in an elemen-

What is certain is that the press writes about rape and rapists much more than it was allowed to under Franco, and that women's organizations, ranging from the Organizacion Feminisia Revolucionaria to reformists in various political parties, have staged major demon-strations and spray-painted walls in protest against rape.

The result has been to make rape an issue, even though the police routinely report only two or three rapes a month across the country.

In February, a 16-year-old girl named Carmentxu, her face hloody, came running in panic from a Barcelona sports field toward a group of young people. A police car appeared as the girl

The House That Bach Built in the South of France

By Michael Zwerm

BRIGNOLES, France, May 31 b (1HT)—Jacques Loussier applied the swing already implied by Bach into a piano/bass/drum context and the result pleased almost everybody. It was one of those rare holes through which popular musi-cians get rich without prostituting music. (Frank Sinatra found anoth-er.) Since 1959, Loussier's seven "Play Bach Jazz" albums have sold u total of 4 million copies.

The profits have been invested in Miraval, an example of the disparate flurry of internationalclass recording studies moving to California deserts. Colorado canyons, Welsh valleys and southern French vineyards. Recording in one of these places has become something of a social asset.

While decentralization is chic.

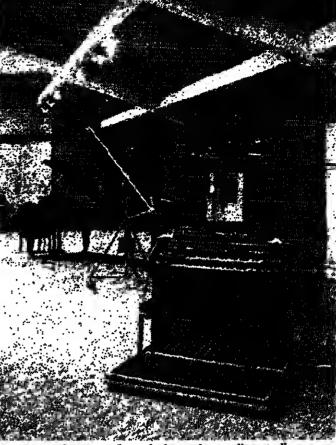

there are also practical advantages. Loussier explains: The musicians don't get stuck in traffic. They ar-rive on time and in good humor. Then they don't have to run out cause it was Saturday, no forensic every hour to stick a franc in the parking meter. And in Paris, if you have rented a studio until 4:30, you have to finish then even if the music is just beginning to feel right. Here, you've got all day."

As a piano student, Loussier was attracted to Bach more than any other composer: "Every time I played his music I was tempted to add to it because I thought this mu-sic should be played to infinity. During Bach's time there was a lot of improvisation. I asked myself: 'Why don't we improvise with it

Films and Television

Loussier continues to sell about 150,000 albums a year. He plays 40 to 50 concerts a year and finds the children of his original audience there. He composes music for fdms and television ("Voltaire"). But most of his time is being invested in Miraval.

The place was neglected when he and his wife, Sylvie, bought it 10 years ago. They followed the classic moving-to-the-country story . . "Competition for wine exports is hope, joy, disappointment, culture tough. The wine isn't profitable,"

Mrs. Loussier owns and runs a boutique and line of children's clothing called "Petit Faune." The workshop and business office are in Miraval. The place already pro-duced a fair wine (Chateau Miraval), so the vineyards were put back in shape. Says Patrice Kuef. Loussier's associate in the studio:

More than $300,000 has been put into the studio alone so far. It boasts a 24-track console, four tyntpani, a Bosendorfer concert grand, harpsichord, a synthesizer, a reverb unit, a natural old-wine-barrel echo chamber and you can literally drive a truck into it.

An Idea That Grew

Both Loussier and Kuef are bearded, bright, highly motivated, The studin is husy two out of every three days, beyond projections for this, the second, year, It grew out of to he possible. As Loussier says: "I their contact when Kuef was re- never do things halfway."

But then we decided it wouldn't really be very professional. The tapes would have to be mixed in Paris anyway. Little by little, the idea grew into a full-blown

"Petite Faune" alone employs an average of 30 people. The vineyards have to be tended. Maxing Le Forrestier or Leonard Gaskin or the Marseilles Opera are recording. Ev-erybody eats lunch together. Up to 50 can be served. It is an unusual mis, taking place as it does in a manor house with medieval origins. Looking at it now, the immediate vicinity, between Brignoles and Barjols in the Var, might still be the Middle Ages. Also, the manner of living, though thoroughly modern in its infrastructure, is somehow medieval. Kuef's wife now works for Mrs. Loussier.

For the studio, it's 10 months isolation, two months inundation. The south of France hlossoms with music festivals in the summer and then Miravel is no longer on the periphery but in the center and the studio will profit from the nearby Antibes Festival to record several jazz albums in July.

Even so, distance is not a handi-cap, according to Kuef: "We made a comparative study between recording here and in Paris. For similar studio facilities, using the same number of musicians for the same amount of time, including transportation and hotel costs, we come ut well under half the price."

An auberge may soon be constructed at the entrance to the domaine. The children of those who live in Miraval must now be transported to school in nearby towns. This causes problems, such as being unable to play with Iriends after school, Why not build a school in Miraval? Eventually, even a town hall? Anything would seem

Hockney's Visual Wonder at Glyndebourne Festival

CLYNDEBOURNE, England, May 31 (1HT)—Advance publicity on the new John Cox production of Mozart's "The Magic Flute," opening the annual Glyndebourne Opera Festival, has cendered the control of Conference of Confer tered on the stage designs of David Hockney, the painter, whose only previous opera has been Glynde-bourne's "The Rake's Progress" of

And, as it has turned out, rightly so. All critical opinion seems to agree that no previous designs for "The Magic Flute," including those of Kokoschka for Salzburg and Chagall for the Met, have at once so hrilliantly and so satisfactorily achieved the blend of Egyptology and Freemasoury called for by Emanuel Schinkaneder's tantalizingly enigmatic and ambiguous soviet Union's legitimate security is," President Carter was in the fortunate tion of having ready a program to meet threat he described. The program, for 3-term defense planning has been in paration for a year; NATO is accepting it /. It provides for small annual increases in defense spending, improvements in force liness and effectiveness, and economizing ecoperation on weapons procurement. en it comes to delivery on those earnest Iges, no doubt more than one NATO mber will come up short. Thirty years of ance on the U.S. shield have glazed the ermination of most European allies, West rmany conspicuously excepted to meet ficult military challenges. The Carter ninistration's NATO initiative nonethes has elicited about as firm a response as 2 could expect from a region as economily and politically troubled as Western rope. There has been transatlantic consulion up, down and sideways. NATO is, in fashion, doing what it was meant to do in paring the defense of the West.

To be sure, not every member of NATO els that is still the alliance's principal job. or one, Canada, secure under the U.S. stragie umbrella, now is seized with the mission setting an example of unilateral disarmaent, it has withdrawn its Europe-based rees from any nuclear role, and is replacing em with conventionally armed aircraft, the Premise Bulent Ecevit spoke Tuesday, vaguely but feelingly, of the need for NATO to go beyond deterrence into dialogue and mutual understanding with the Russians. One could instantly see why he is so highly regarded as a poet.

> Notwithstanding such passing triumphs of fad and pique over national interest, NATO will endure. No other instrument is available to maintain the military balance essential to the physical protection and the inner equilibrium even of those members who are unable to give the alliance the attention that their dependence upon it requires. It is sometimes said that the perception of a common Soviet threat is the glue of NATO. That really isn't so. At the core of the alliance is a common good nature, the feeling among the members of NATO that there is a preciousness to the defense and welfare of all democracies, regardless of the peccadilloes of any of them. That the members — or, at any given moment, most of the members - are democracies builds in an empathy for the failings of

Kettle Drums and a Triangle

The headlines notwithstanding, the world d not move any nearer to war over the holily weekend. A great many important peoe just happened to he near U.S. microiones and so there erupted what the idling tizen might well have mistaken for a Great oreign Policy Debate. There is no particular tuse for alarm; those who feel a need to orry about the diplomacy of the day might rieve with us not over what was said but hat was left unsaid.

Apparently stalled, again, in their negotiaons for a second arms limitation treaty, the Inited States and the Soviet Union exhanged demands for the next concession. and while both tried hard to isolate the ALT negotiations from other disputes, they ame close to calling each other liars about he extent of Soviet (and Cuban) responsibilty for the Shaba invasion of Zaire and other urmoil in Africa.

Apparently delighted, therefore, to step on sensitive Soviet toe. President Carter's naional security adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski, ame off a plane from Peking to announce hat the United States and China were daily inding more common, namely anti-Soviet, ground. He accused the Russians of breaking he code of detente, charging them with vioations of human rights, an alarming military build-up in Europe, hateful anti-U.S. propaganda, strategic encirclement of the Middle East, the stirring up of racial conflict in Africa and - a new U.S. concern - the concentration of forces on the border of China.

Obviously sharing some of this concern. the heads of NATO governments then gathered to plan a matching build-up of their forces in Europe and some support for friendly African countries. The Chinese cheered this two-front denunciation of the Russians and proceeded to denounce both superpowers for refusing to disarm. Moscow was the more dangerous of the two, they added, and unless resisted, the more likely source of a new world war.

We make light of some of this rhetoric even though we well recognize the deadly issues involved and the great costs of rival ambitions on parade. But all this maneuveriog is transparently tactical and in no small measure political — certainly — in Washington terms and probably also in Moscow's and Peking's. The U.S. regard for human rights in the Soviet Union, for instance, would ring more true if it were not delivered in an embrace with the People's Republic of China, whose versions of the Orlov trial are never made known. The diversion of Soviet attention and weapons to the Chinese frontier is hardly a new development or without a certain comfort to NATO.

The fact is that President Carter and Mr. Brzezinski have now settled comfortably into the chairs of their predecessors and are glob-ally advocating something very close to what Presidents Nixon and Ford and Mr. Kissinger sought; a hard-headed deal with Moscow to limit the nuclear arms race even without agreement on other issues but with some promise of better competitive behavior in other realms; a cozying up to China without sacrificing Taiwan, in part to make the Russians more pliable and in part for its own value; a determination to resist Soviet penetration elsewhere, notably the Middle East and Africa, provided Congress can be persuaded to give the White House some leverage in the form of money and even arms always on the understanding that few Americans these days favor any Vietnam-like inter-

The Republicans came to these positions from a history of hard-line anti-Communism and therefore wound up overselling their skill as peacemakers. The Democrats come to them from the other direction and now run the risk of overdramatizing their toughness, But the underlying problems-and American responses-have not changed much. The country would be served better if instead of these tactical advertisements it could occasionally be treated to a series of sober presidential definitions of the courses we should pursue the world over.

Soviet Policies: A Summing Up

By Victor Zorza

WASHINGTON—Even if we jority view that a conservative re-could say with assurance gime is more likely to prevail after who is going to succeed Leonid Brezhnev, this would not help us to predict what policies the Kremlin might follow in his absence. Any analysis must be based on some-thing other than the little we know of the gray individuals who comprise most of the Politburo.

Perhaps they are not even as gray as we think they are. Even CIA an-alysts whose job it is to study their personalities and characters confess that they know far less about them than they would like to. Before he succeeded Stalio, Nikita Khrushchev was regarded as one of the colorless Politburo figures, and the same was thought of Alexander Dubcek before he led Czechoslovakis into its experiment with democracy. Even if somebody had told us in advance that Khrushchev and Dubcek were going to emerge as the top leaders, we would still have had no grounds for assuming that they were going to make the dra-matic policy changes they did.

Debate

Three possible lines of development have emerged in the debate among Western analysts about the future of the Soviet Union after Brezhnev. Most of the government analysis and some of the older academic experts on the Soviet Union whose opinions I have sampled assume that things will go oo much as before. Some of the intelligeoce and academic experts believe that a turn to the right, to a more conservative and hardline policy, is quite likely. And some of the academic experts, mostly the younger ones, and very few intelligence analysts, believe that a more liberal regime might concelvably follow the Bre-

I am firmly on the side of this liberal "faction" - but I would add that its prediction is likely to come true only if Western polisome time to come, and in some small way it is a summing up of whatever insight I have acquired since I began analyzing Kremlin policies in 1950. The most telling lesson I have learned is that there are always policy struggles going on in the Kremlin between the right and the left, between a conservative wing on the one hand and a moderate or more liberal wing on the other, even if the evidence of such struggles does not become available to us until much later.

Discouraging

The most discourzging lesson I have learned is how difficult it is to persuade the powers that be in the Western capitals, particularly in Washington, that such struggles are in progress, and that in shaping our own policies we ought to take that into consideration. That is not to say that the West ought necessarily to support one Kremlin leader against another, but that it ought to act in a way that would help the Kremlin to decide on the policies that would be to the mutual benefit of both East and West, But in Washington domestie political reasons often prevent the pursuit of policies which would take such struggles into account. When Winston Churchill proposed to Presi-dent Eisenhower after the death of Stalin a summit meeting with the new Soviet leaders, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles advised firmly against it - and a rare opportunity to devise a new relation-ship with the Kremlin was lost. Only later did it become generally accepted that one of the Kremlin factions had wanted at the time to develop a more cooperative rela-tionship with the West. There have been several other such missed opportunities since then.

Sometimes the failure to act on such opportunities is due more to a failure of analysis than to a failure of Western policy. The present maBrezhnev is based oo a number of assumptions. One of these is that the Soviet leadership is committed first of all to its own perpetuation — which is a view I share. But it is theo argued — and this is where f disagree - that the instinct for selfpreservation will make the new Soviet leaders dissent, to prevent political reform, to avert innovation.

Wrong View

I believe this is the wrong view, because there is a good deal of evidence that a new generation of Soviet leaders is emerging which holds that without innovation and reform, without economic experimentation and political change, the Soviet regime will find it difficult to retain its place as a leading power in the modern world. They are just as interested in self-perpetuation, both for themselves and for the regime, as their conservative col-leagues. But they believe that their eods would be best achieved by following more liberal policies, both at home and abroad - and this is where we can help ourselves by helping them. In the transition period which the Soviet leadership has already entered, and in the struggle for the succession to Brezhnev which will come into the open sooner or later, these conservative leaders and their "liberal" - for want of a better word - opponents are bound to clash, repeatedly. By devising our foreign policies in ways which might help the "liberals," by meet-ing them half-way in economic and arms negotiations - provided al-ways that we do not thereby injure the West's basic interests - we can do a great deal to promote the kind of East-West understanding that has seemed to be almost within our grasp several times since the deat cymakers help it to come true. This All one can do in the space of a column is the last I will write for column is to express some conclusions hased on several decades of work in this field - although others who have worked equally long have come to quite different views. In the end it comes down to a per-sonal opinion, and it is often said that those who urge the kind of policy I discuss here are personally "soft" on the Kremlin, that they would give it anything it wants. So far as my own views are concerned. this is easily refuted by the hard line I have taken so often in the face of what I have considered So-

> I thus believe that the West can, and should, take firm action to arrest the expansion of Soviet power in Africa. If we fall to do that, we will in effect be helping the Kremlin hardliners, for they will come to believe that they can get away with anything, and will therefore be en-couraged to try even more risky adventures and to follow an even less accomodating policy in other nego-tiations with the West. But our resistance to the Kremlin's excesses must be part of a constructive policy designed to evolve a new rela-uooship which could be opened up by the present transition from the Brezhnev rule to a new regime that witt be represented, sooner or later, by a new generation of Soviet leaders. Above all, we must beware of missing the opportunities we have repeatedly missed in the past and one such opportunity is pre-senting itself now and is being intensively discussed by U.S. policymakers.

> Should President Carter invite Leonid Brezhnev to a summit meeting? Brezhnev, it is argued, is too weak physically and therefore po-litically to make such a meeting worthwhile. The struggle for the succession, it is said is already in progress, and Carter should therefore wait until it is resolved, and meet Brezhnev's succesor who would be eager to gain the interna-

Turkish Issues

In connection with the letter of Mr. Armenian sent from Athens, "Questions on Turkey." (IHT, April 22-23], may I point out the following: Firstly, Turkey's intervention in Cyprus in July, 1974 was in no way a violation of its NATO commitments. Under the Treaty of Guarantee signed by Britain, Turkey and Cyrpus in 1960, Turkey had the right to intervene. Under the Panama Treaty recently passed by the U.S. Congress the United States reserves the right of military intervention in the Panama Canal under certain circumstances. Is this a violation of NATO commit-

Secondly, the Turkish interven-tion in Cyprus was a clear case of self-defense — to prevent the seizure of an adjacent island by a potentially hostile power in violation of international agreements. Is that much different from the action taken by the United States during the Cuban Missile Crisis of 1962?

Would it not be more loyal of ethnic minorities in the United States to put aside their past and present grudges and give priority to the vital interests of their adopted country? For only then would they be entitled to use the term "we' when referring to Americans,

Italian Communists: An Important Jump

By Jonathan Power

R OME-If Italy's Red Brigades thought the kidnapping of Aldo Moro would provoke a crisis of repression that would push the Communist Party into militant opposition, they have miscalculated. The relationship between the Communist party and the govern-ing Christian Democrats is stronger now than it has ever been. Indeed. some argue that the Communists by stiffening the spine of the Christian Democrats throughout the erisis have now positioned themselves so that they are increasingly perceived as the "guarantors of

One proponent of this argument is Altiero Spinelli who in the 1976 ttalian elections ran successfully as an independent candidate on the Communist ptatform. Spinelli is in a unique position to observe the progress of "historic compromise." He is one of the founding fathers of the European Economic Community and for many years was one of talk's two commissioners at the Italy's two commissioners at the Brussels commission. But he is also an ex-member of the Communist party who was expelled from it in 1937 because of his opposition to the Moscow show trials. He is certain that "if the party had taken tional prestige conferred by a sum-mit meeting, and would therefore be willing to pay a political price power after the war, I would have been among the first to be liquidatsion is indeed in progress, and if, as they is every reason to believe, it is exacerned with policies as well as personalities, then the time for Washington to try to influence the

In a Nutshell

Spinelli's argument in a pulsheli is that the Moro affair "has been an important jump in legitimizing the democratic base of the Communist party." If the party had any reservations about democracy, he argues, it would have taken a softer attitude towards the extreme left. In fact, it was more hard than the Christian Democrats and if the party bad not stayed firm then it is even likely that the government would have made concessions to the Red Brigades.

But hasn't the Moro murder weakened the electoral position of the PCI(ttalian Communist party)? After all, the Christian Democrats pulled voters away from the PCI in the local government elections held immediately after Moro's death, "No." says Spinelli. "I have a difcession struggle — but in doing this he could hardly be accused of back-iog a particular Soviet leader, or of ferent interpretation. The electorate did not punish the Christian Democrats as the rightists said they would. The electorate was saving in effect that it was not frightened by the closer association of the Christian Democrats with the Communists." At the same time, Spinelli makes it clear that the Communists must not be passive partners of the government. They must up their bid or the electorate, having swung to the governing party in a moment of crisis, will continue to withhold their voies from the PCI. If the PCI don't show a spirit of aggressive criticism the electorate will punish them for complacently supporting an inefficient and hopelessly hu-reaueratic government. The next step for Spinelli is clear. The PCI has no choice but to demand a place in the government. But not before the election of the new president of Italy at the end of the year. (The death of Moro, the likely joint party candidate has al-ready complicated this enough. No one wants anything more to interfere with that delicate piece of inter-party maneuvering.) Once that hurdle is over, however, he predicted. "I ant sure there will be a showdown.

It would be a mistake, he argues, for the Communists to be content with only minor ministries. Al-though they couldn't expect foreign affairs, the interior or defense (on another occasion Spinelli is quoted as saving he would not trust the PCI with these "because I am a cautious creature") they should go for something substantial like the economic ministries.

But what about the "Allende factor." Surely, I asked this will mean a flight of capital which, as happened in Chile, would undermine the regime?

"There will be some of this to begin with," responded Spinelli philosophically, "hut not for too long. The PCt does not have a policy of nationalization. Indeed it argues for de-nationalizing certain sectors. The party is developing a sense of the importance of free enterprise. However, not a sense of adora-

By appeasing the capitalists in It-aly inevitably means provoking the left. I suggested. How can a Communist party, intimately involved in what would be at the beginning of a conservative government, keep the extreme left from growing and hecoming even more dangerous? Already there are hundreds of thousands of unemployed gradu-ales, many of them prone to agitation and even violence. The Red Brigades say the intelligence services are preparing for another

Shot Their Bolt

The Red Brigades, Spioelli counters, have shot their bolt. "The Moro kidnapping was such an extreme act that they lost contact even with the fringe left parties, Terrorism can only succeed if society is really in crisis, But Italy is not. The murder of Moro reinforced the respect for law and the importance of democracy."

Spinelli's thoughts, although conversational in manner are delivered with a certain authority. Spinelli may not be a party member htat his thinking is close to that of its hierarchy. "This party," he concludes "has a eurious history. When fascism was in the ascendancy we were the most important part of the resistance. When the Red Brigade kidnapped Aldo Moro, we were the most important pillar of the resistance against concessions. For the construction of the republic our support is crucial."

in several months' time.

This alliance has held together longer and under more difficult circumstances than any other combination of nations in this century. It was formed to defend a free civilization, and despite savage external and constant internal pressures, it has restored Europe, established a tolerable halance of military power in the world, and avoided a major world war for almost two generations.

Considering that there were only 20 years between the last two world war, they must have been doing something right, and it is therefore surprising that they now sound so anxious. When NATO was formed, the Sino-Soviet alliance was proclaiming the brotherhood of all Communist comrades and the fortheoming conquest of the world. But now the NATO allies have better relations with both Moscow and Peking thao the two Communist giits have with one another. Contrast tt is no wonder that the Russigns, who helieve in economic determinism, keep so many mili-tary divisions in Eastern Europe. The troubles within the Communist world make the differences within the Western world seem almost amiable. The cootrast between the rising standard of living in the free nations of the West compared with the bleak record of economic stag-nation and social repression in the Soviet Union is a constant problem for Moscow. It can terrify its allies but it cannot persuade them, and it is up agaiost the awkward realization that even the Communist political parties of Western Europe have to make peace with the free parties in order to survive. Still, there is ohviously a major threat. For if the Communists are losing the ideological war, they still immense political power. which they are trying to deploy in the Middle East and in Africa and increasingly in the oceans of the

The main purpose of the NATO allies here in Washington is to demonstrate to the Soviet Union that this won't work either, that if they can't get a safe, balanced reduction military arms, then they will match the Soviet military huildup even if it burts,

As I understand it, President Carter preferred another approach to this problem. He wanted not a tactical but a general settlement all this. What is going on bere now, I think, is a kind of preventive propaganda war. Carter is trying to tell the Russians privately that he wants a strategic arms agreement — and really means it — but that even if he got the terms he wants, be couldn't get the ratification of the Secate so long as the Russians are using the Cubans as a Soviet foreign legion in the trouble spots of Africa. Washington is not really very wor-ried about the Cubans. With a few

Vestern planes and a few hundred paratroopers, the invaders from Angola into Zaire were scattered within a few bours. The Cubans can be dealt with by the organization of a well-trained and armed foreign legion, preferably an African foreign tegion, which is apparently in formation. And it is interesting that the Cuban casualties in Angola and Ethiopia, if my information from official sources is correct, were not sent back to Havana for medical aid, but to Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

All this has been discussed with the utmost care in the private talks among the Western allies here, but with a renewed interest io organizing the West for working and consulting together on world problems. Big Crisis?

You can hardly read the papers or watch the television these days without being told that some kind of big crisis is developing among the nations of the world. And yet it is hard to escape the feeling that there is something, reguely false. there is something vaguely false about this recent propaganda.

The free nations have many hard onomie and military problems to resolve with their finance ministers on budgets, trade and balance of payments but the Soviet emphasis on weapons, forward emplacement of divisions and missiles, and proxy armies in Africa has changed the tune within the diplomatic discus-sions of the West. Younger leaders like Schmidt of West Germany, Giscard d'Estaing of Fraoce, and Carter, though they differed a year ago, seem to be coming closer to the notion that they have more to gaio by working out common policies in defense of a common civilization than by dividing on national and political lines. And this may be a fact of considerable historic importance.

Dollar Falls, Trade Thin

LONDON, May 31 (AP-DJ) — The dollar fell sharply against ma-jor currencies today, apparently as the result of a negative assessment of recent ecocomic trends in the United States on the part of many foreign-exchange market participants. _____ The dollar fell to 2.0905 Deutsche marks from 2.1108 and to 21.52 yen from 223. It also dropped to 1.8922 Swiss frame 1.9230 as sterling rose to from 1.9230 as sterling rose to $1.83 from $1.8187.

old prices reflected the rising rate of U.S. inflation. At the end of the day, gold was quoted at $184.50 an ounce bid, $185 offered, the highest level since mid-March and up from $182.50-183 yesterday. However, dealers said that trading volume became progressively thinner as the day wore on so that movements were probably exaggerated. Not only were dealers occupied with mooth-end bookeeping, but many had already departed for the annual meeting of the Interna-tional Forex Club in Municb at the end of this week.

In a presentation in Frankfurt.
Englebert Dicken, a member of Commerzhank's management board, said the basic problem of a growing U.S. trade deficit has yet to be resolved. He termed the re-cent strength of the dollar as nothing more than a technical reaction. During its first year your Bank was successful in establishing its name and reputation within the Arab and international banking communities, and in gaining the confidence of its clients and depositors. This was achieved by following conservative approach dictated by sound and prudent banking practices, while at the same time moving forward to selectively take advantage of profitable business opportunities which enabled it to achieve its ambitious targets. Moreover, minute was given to the selection of a highly professional staff in order to over priority was given to the selection of a highly professional staff in order to lay down the basis for continued sound growth in the future.

Balance Sheet and Profit and Loss Accounts The Bank completed its first year with encouraging results as may be seen from the following:

1) The total balance sheet grew steadily to reach F.Fr. 693,157,133 on December 31, 1977. This figure was achieved at a steady pace averaging 6,25%

2) Gross profits before tax amounting to F.Fr. 6,994,499.61 yielding gross income at 9.33% on the average paid-up expital which was paid in 3 equal installments of F.Fr. 25 million each. The Directors have decided that in addition to normal depreciation, the full amount of the establishment costs will be amortized during the first year.

Consequently net taxable income was F.Fr. 3,721.058.40. Increase of Capital In order to keep pace with the rapid expansion experienced by the Bank during its first year, capital had to be raised from F.Fr. 50 million to F.Fr. 100 million, of which F.Fr. 75 million was paid up by end of the year and the remaining balance was paid up in mid-April 1978.

Presence Abroad Presence Abroad

To assure further expansion during the second year and subsequent years, a number of steps have been taken main among which are the following:

1) The establishment of a London Representative Office in September 1977.

This office has contributed in the first instance to the strenghthening of our ties with British and International banks. Then the Bank is to develop this opening in response to the expansion required on London's leading fit market.

2) The inauguration of a Representative Office in Bahrain in September 1977.

But due to great business potential in the area a more active presence of our Bank is required therefore and this office is in the process of being transformed into an offshore banking unit which we anticipate to inaugurate in

3) The Bank in cooperation with our parent companies SAFICO and AFC (II was instrumental in establishing SAUDIFIN in Geneva with a paid-up rapital of S.Fr. 10 million in which the Bank holds a 50% share.

International Financing
In the area of international linancing, the Bank was lead-manager co-manager of six toternational loans and bond issues, in addition to being a participant in a significant number of such transactions. Furthermore the Bank has engaged in a new important activity. i.e. the promotion of business cooperation between France and the West on one hand and the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia and Arab countries on the other hand, through the setting up of joint ventures between Western and Arab business interests in the areas of industry and construction

The Bank has placed emphasis on its role as an Arab institution and made special efforts to develop its business accordingly in the following fields:

1) Cooperation with Arab financial institutions: our efforts have been successful in this respect through the establishment of correspondent banking relationship and close ties with a number of Arab Central Banks and con

4 Study of His Thought

By Charles A. Fecher. Foreword by Alfred A. Knopf, Knopf, Illus. trated, 391 pages, $15

Reviewed by John Leonard

H.L. MENCKEN once wrote of Arnold Bennett that he "carries skepticism so far that he "carries skepticism so far that it often takes oo the appearance of a mere peasant-like suspicion of ideas, bellicose and unintelligent." Even Mencken's newest biographer—hagiographer is perhaps a better word—pauses, if oot to smile, at least to shake his head at such a criticism comine from such s critic. criticism coming from such s critic.
This is the very same Mencken who, on Charles A. Fecher's own wbo, on Charles A. Fecher's own evidence, disdained Marx and Freud as "rumble-bumble"; rather missed the point of Hitler; seems never to have read "Moby Dick"; was indifferent to painting and poetry and opera and jazz and the theater; contended that "there are the bised of motion German. only two kinds of music; German music and bad music"; and told us that there was oo more sense in Faulkner than in "the wop boob.

In 1940, at age 60, Mencken said: "Oo all known subjects rangiog from aviation to xylophooe-playing. I have fixed and invariable deas. They have oot changed since I was four or five years old."

Fecher tends to agree although he does point out that the later Menckeo thought worse of George Bernard Shaw and Thomas Mann than the earlier Meocken had. Otherwise his contempt for democracy, Puritans, Methodists, presidents and Celts was consistent to a degree of hobgoblinism. He believed in beer, Beethoven, Joseph Conrad, the Bill of Rights, himself and "the supreme virtue" of competence; on just about everything else he was a dedicated agnostic. If there were a God, He would probably be a mountebank or a poltroon.

Fecher, whose desire to write a book on Mencken "goes back so far that I can scarcely recall a time when I did not have it," doesn't think of himself as a biographer: He wants to make the case for Mencken as a political theorist, a ritic, a philogist and an artist. There are biographies ovailable by Isaac Goldberg, Ernest Boyd, Edgar Kemler, William Manchester and Carle Bode, not to mention Sara Mayfield's marvelous memoir, "The Constant Circle." And yet so steeped is Fecher in his subject that he has written a biography anyway, adequate unto today, full of the better-the irresistible-anecdotes. plus a year-by-year chronology, and including a charming back-ward glance by Alfred A. Knopf himself, who published Mencken from 1917 on.

Mencken as a thinker? For most of his 352 pages of extremely conscihis 352 pages of extremely consci-entious synopsizing, Fecher seems to be making too much. Really, es-timable as it is, "The American Language" is not in a class with Darwio's "The Origio of the Species" and Newton's "Mathe-matical Priociples of Natural Philosophy." Nor are "the whole collected works of Thorsteio Vehlen probably of less impor-Veblen...probably of less importance" than Mencken's essay oo Vebleo. Aristotle, St. Paul and

Nietzsche doo't come to my mine when Mencken's name is men-tioned, although Voltaire does And I do not believe that it is a hard to describe Mencken's prose as it is to talk about "the Fifth Symphony or the Meistersinger overture or the Sacre du Printemps to somebody who has never heard Again on the basis of Fecher's own evidence, Nietzsche and T.H. Huxley told Mencken most of what he needed to know about religion.

A political theorist deaf to Man, and blind to the situation of blacks in America—and whose opinions on Jews were problematical—is a theorist who ought to do more looking and thinking and feeling. A literary critic who oeglects Meiville, scants Henry James and thinks that Heming way was a "osughry fellow" needs remedial reading A music critic who says out loud that Straviosky "oever had a musical idea in his life" isn't betening A thinker perhaps overthe descript. thinker, perhaps overly devoted to his mother, who refers to Freud as "a great deal of racy nonsense," is afraid of a couch.

By page 352, Fecher calms down and is willing to admit that "his thought...was seidom original and never profound." We can then look back and see that, yes, be was valuable, even precious, to o developing culture that had to rid itself of the Puritan albatross, to mock its poli-ticians, to suspect the plutocracy, to understand Theodore Dreise and Sinclair Lewis, to respect the intelligence of women and permit them to vote, and to revel and rain page in our vital language. Any man who loved "Huckleberry Finn" and hated the atomic bomb can't have been wholly a mountebank. Any man for whom ideas were fun and words were grenades in the bunkers of smugness is to be cherished and forgiven.

He was one of our splendid autodidacts. The democracy he abhorred made him possible. Like most splendid autodidacts without an enemy he "was simply unable to function." He wanted to "make an articulate noise in the world," and sidd so. What a joy it must have, been, for "a civilized white man," anyway, to belong to his Saturday Night Club. It is impossible to write a bad book about him, and Fecher hasn't written a had book.

An Lyan,

The total included a record $18,000 paid for a single bottle—a 114-year-old jeroboam of 1864 vintage Chateau Lafite—by Memphis restaurant owner John Grisanti.

Mr. Grisanti, 49, said that he had been prepared to pay more for the bottle—the equivalent of about five regular wine bottles which he plans to serve at a $1,500-per-plate charity dinner in Memphis to benefit St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital, a facility specializing in the treatment of leukemia among children.

The previous record of $14,200 was paid two years ago in New Or-leans by David Lyons of Los Ange-les for a 24-ounce bottle of 1800 vintage Lafite.

It will accept them - if ouncilman Marvin Braude, said at all — only with the most would initiate action, perhaps stringent cost controls. This is clearly impossible to achieve given the IOC's insistence that the city accept Olympic rule four and as-sume all financial liability."

The IOC, at a meeting in Athens carlier this month, refused the city's demands — on grounds that they violated the IOC rules — and nwarded the games to Los Angeles "conditionally," provided the city agree to IOC terms by July 31.

Any hope that Los Angeles can host the games has been killed by taxpayer opposition and the intransigence of the IOC. Braude said, and further talks with the IOC would be useless:

"I ask you for understanding which will be mutual." said Gmoch, a manager known for uncompromisingly stern discipline in training. I remind you that first friends must fight and then they understand one another. From now, heart, head and door will be open for everybody.

Wonderful oratory for a soccer coach, particularly an East European. He then demonstrated its value by throwing open the gates on his team's next practice match... ,a game against a local Rosario eleven in which the friendly, open, understanding Poles treated journalists to a workout which contained only two of their likely first team!

West Germany, meanwhile, tra-velled today to Buenos Aires from its own Cordoba encampment. A year ago. Schoen's team looked in invincible form but lately defeats by Brazil and then Sweden have produced a neurosis among its press and camp followers that Schoen, for all his own considerable experience and conversational expertise, has not been able to/prevent from reaching the players.

No European Victors

My own view is that West Germany is capable of returning to something like its form of last fall—and if it could do so will be extremely hard to depose even here in Latin America where no European team has yet won the World Cup.

West Germany's team, which was apparently "leaked" (if again the leak is not a false move), throws us all back to the World Cup of 1970 in which Schoen surprised everyone by settling an argument within his team as to wbether Uwe Seeler, the old warhorse, or Gerd Muller, the youngblood, should be his center-forward. Schoen, aware that the two men did not get on. put them together as roommates, and together as goalscorers. Now it is said the German team is divided as to the merits at centerforward of Dieter Muller of Cologne and Klaus Fischer of Schalke 04. Both are consistent marksmen; Muller has recovered remarkably from injury, Pischer tired toward the end of the demanding Bundesliga season hut remains a phenome nally acrobatic goalscorer. And, if the leak is correct, Schoen has again opted for a marriage of the two center-forwards, denying himself the width of two wingers.

Again, if the team as published is right, he has revealed another new hand, including Hansi Muller, the 20-year-old Stuttgart serviceman, on the left of his midfield. This has been West Germany's problem position and, when I spoke to Schoen SANGELES, May 31 (UPI) IOC took, its uncompromising though he said then that the playand it is time for the city to the city "The public does not want the the future. Art Buchwald Moral Standards

WASHINGTON-The Supreme Court is still wrestling with the question of obscenity. Last week it ruled that, while juries must vote what is obscene by the standards of the local community, they cannot include children as part of the community. The juror must decide not just for himself but for everyone in the area what should and what should not be permitted to through the Melcher said. "This is tougher than a murder trial. I'm not just sitting in judgment for myself. I'm representing the entire community. excluding children.

"That shouldn't be hard," I said.
"Everyone in this neighborhood is against obscenity."

That's what they say," Melcher said. But they tell me one thing and then go out and tell Kinsey and Masters and Johnson researchers something entirely different. If community." "Well, I was trying to figure out some way of getting a fix on what the community thought was or was not abscene, so I took a copy of 'The Joy of Sex' and went from door to door asking people what positions in the book appealed to "What was the result?"

Fire Destroys Film

At Eastman Museum ROCHESTER, N.Y., May 31 (UPI) — The fire at the estate of camera magnate George Eastman destroyed or damaged 3,000 movie originals locluding classics starring Buster Keaton, Greta Garbo and Spencer Tracy.

The fire Monday night at the loternational Museum of Photography, on the estate of the founder of Eastman Kodak Co., caused at least $1 million in damage, according to firemen and film authorities who searched through the dehris.

"Most of the pictures the defendant mailed were taken on Capitol Hill."

"That's a lot." I admitted. "Everyone tells me they're against X-rated movies, hut 'Deep Throat is still playing at a down-town theater. It's had a longer run than 'Star Wars.' Who keeps going to the movie?" "Probably people from George-town," I said, "Their morals are a lot looser than those of us who live in Wesley Heights. I'd say they've been lowering the community standards in Washington by at least 10 percent."

"That's the problem." Melcher The Supreme Court has ruled that a jury in an obscenity case must take into consideration the opinions of everybody in the community, from the most sensitive people' as well as 'deviant sexual groups, before we come to a decision.

"What do they mean by 'deviam sexual groups'?" I asked him "Nobody has really spelled it out for us. Maybe it's people who go skinny dipping or who dress up in each other's clothes.

"We don't have anybody like that in our neighborhood." I said. "I heard that's the sort of thing that goes on in Bethesda."

"But Bethesda is part of the community." Melcher said. "I have

"Don't forget Chevy Chase." I told him. "They pretend to be straight, but I've heard the husbands go to massage parlors when their wives are away nn summer vacation."

Melcher said, "That's my problem. Every time I think I've got the community standards down pat someone tells me something that throws them completely out of kilter. You've heard about the waterheds at the Watergate, haven't you?"

"Who hasn't heard about the Watergate waterbeds? You know something, Melcher? I think you're taking the Supreme Court guidelines on obscenity too seriously. II you try to figure out whether the guy is guilty or not by community standards, you're going to go crazy. Send him up for life and forget about it."

"But the conviction could be thrown out by a higher court." "Why" I asked

White House aides consider her the most influential first lady since Eleanor Roosevelt.

Rosalynn Carter as Emerging Power

By Martin Tolchin

WASHINGTON (NYT)—Rosalynn Carter was perplexed. Despite the vast public relations apparatus of the White House, she recalled recently, she felt that her husband's message was oot reaching the American people.

Jody Powell, the president's press secretary, seemed to spend most of his time putting out brush fires, Mrs. Carter complained that cohody seemed to be concentrating on the larger picture, and she thought that Gerald Rafshoon, the Atlanta advertising man who had produced the Carter campaign commercials, was the man for the job.

The first lady summoned Mr. Rafshoon to her small, elegant office in the East Wing of the White House and discussed wing of the with him.

"I asked her, 'Do you want to run some advertising spots?" Rafshoon recalled.
"She said, 'No, I want you to go to work

And so he will, on July I, in the latest example of the emerging political power of Mrs. Carter, White House aides consider her the most influential first lady since Eleanor Roosevelt, and some senior aides say that she is even more influential than Mrs. Roosevelt was in her political role in the White House.

Mrs. Carter's involvement in the affairs of state has ranged from her support of Walter Mondale as Mr. Carter's running mate to her urging the president to stand hy Bert Lance during the investigation of his hanking practices. She has lobbied successfully for changes in federal funding, has affected policy, has promoted her own candidates and has generally served as an all-purpose adviser to the president.

Mrs. Carter was involved in all the major personnel changes that grew out of the summit conference at Camp David, Md., last month. She sat in on all the meetings that the presideot held with his Cahinet and with top White House aides, taking notes that served as reminders for future presidential actions and writing down her own recommendations.

The first lady also attends Cabinet meetings. "If I didn't, there's no way I could discuss things with Jimmy in an intelligent way," she said in an ioterview in

"She just has a very good mind and po-litical sense and doesn't hesitate to tell the president what she thinks." Hamilton Jordan, the de facto chief of staff, said. Whenever I think the president is pursuing an unwise course of action and I strike out with him. I try to get her on my side."

Presidential adviser Rosalynn Carter.

Some aides go farther. They say that Mrs. Carter has better political judgment than her husband and that she is more concerned than Mr. Carter about his declining popularity in the polls.

Some question, however, whether Mrs. Carter's strong support of Mr. Lance served the best iolerests of the president or of the nation.
"I liked Bert." Mrs. Carter said. "I don't think he could do anything wrong. I didn't think Jimmy could desert him." The emergence of Mrs. Carter as a maior influence in the predominantly male preserve that is the Carter White House has raised other questions.

"There are some people who don't think it's such a good idea for the first lady to be so influential." said Dr. Thomas Bryant. chairman of the President's Commission on Mental Health, which was Mrs. Carter's major project last year, "After all, who elected her, and to what?"

Dr. Bryant said that he did not share that view, and others said that they considered it simpleminded to believe that any public official would not draw upon his wife, friends and private experts for help in making decisions.

Mrs. Carter's political influence stems from a working partnership that began when Carter quit the Navy to return to Plains, Ga., to run the family peanut husi-

"It all goes back to the time we came home and started the warehouse," Mrs. Carter said. "I could tell him what was working and what was not because I kept the books."

Mr. Carter continued to lean on her judgments in his political career. lo the presidential campaign, Mr. Rafshoon said. "she would just come book to Jimmy and tell him who was performing and who wasn't. When he went someplace, everyone performed."

People will tell her things that they're reluctant to talk to the president about. said Mr. Powell. "If we've got a particular problem that's one among many that a president has to deal with, she can be a particular asset in getting him to focus."

Mrs. Carter's understated style is in the Southern tradition. "Some things I won't even approach him on. I know his mind's made up." she said.

On most subjects, however, she says that she acts as a "sounding board" at their frequent lunches together, their quiet even-ings and their walks around the White House grounds.

But she is a sounding board that talks back. "I argue with him, I tell him when I don't agree with him," she said.

Mrs. Carter has focused on some major projects. Building on her experience as a member of the Georgia Mental Health Commission, she served as honorary chairman of the President's Commission on Mental Health,

"She was iovolved in the nuts and bolts activities," Dr. Peter Bourne, the president's special assistant for health issues.

Dr. Bryant, the commission chairman said that at first "nooe of us knew exactly what to expect." The commission quickly learned, however, that "she wanted to be treated and perceived as a member of the working group," he said.

In the process, she persuaded James McIntyre, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, to add $23.4 million to the $117 million budget for the National Institute of Mental Health, $12 million to the $34 million drug abuse hudget and $4.8 million to the $16 million alcoholism budget.

Mrs. Carter has a candidate for the directorship of the National Institute of Mental Health, He is Douglas Skelton, the director of the Georgia Human Resources Commission. As in the case of Mr. Rafshoon, she is likely to recommend Georgians in an administration that is topheavy with Georgians.

The mental health appointment is not a presidential appointment, however, It is to be made by Joseph Califano Jr., secretary of health, education and welfare, and Mrs. Carter and Dr. Bourne and Dr. Bryant, who also support the Georgian, say they have not interfered in the selection process. One must assume, however, that Mr. Califano is aware of her interest and that it will carry weight.
